Thank you, Mr. President,

We have seen progressive measures taken to protect lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) persons in past months. In the capacity-building spirit of Item 10, we would like to share some of those best practices.

New Zealand has passed a law to clear historical gay sex convictions. This law will allow hundreds of men to have convictions for homosexual offences erased from their criminal records.¹ This bill sends a clear signal that discrimination against gay people is no longer acceptable and that the government is committed to righting its wrongs from the past.

In Trinidad & Tobago, the High Court of Justice declared unconstitutional the criminalization of consensual sexual relations between same-sex adults.² With this historic decision, Trinidad & Tobago becomes the third country in the English-speaking Caribbean, together with the Bahamas and Belize, to repeal laws that criminalize consensual sex between adults of the same-sex that originated from the region’s past. We call on the remaining 37 Commonwealth countries to follow suit. In Tunisia a presidential commission recommended to the president of Tunisia to decriminalise same-sex activity.

In El Salvador, the government approved the Institutional Policy for the Care of the LGBT Population to make sure legal and administrative processes are carried out without discrimination.³ In a similar way in the Philippines, the cities of Mandaluyong and Ilo Ilo approved an ordinance to protect the rights of LGBT people from discrimination.⁴ In Japan, schools are introducing uniforms designed less around traditional gender stereotypes and with more respect to gender expression by allowing students to choose their attire—a major benefit for LGBT youth with diverse identities and expressions.⁵ Eswatini organized and hosted its first pride. This was a historic milestone for the Eswatini and southern African LGBTI community.

In Pakistan, the National Assembly, which includes the Parliament and the Senate, passed the Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act giving non-binary persons, including both trans as well as gender non-conforming individuals and intersex persons, the ability to self-declare their gender and obtain national IDs and passports, as well as the right to vote and run for office.⁶ In a historic move, the WHO removed all trans-related categories from the mental and behavioral disorders chapter of the International Classification.⁷

While trans-related categories have been deleted from the mental disorders chapters, new categories

(Gender Incongruence of Adolescence and Adulthood and Gender Incongruence of Childhood) were introduced under a chapter on ‘conditions related to sexual health’.

In Sweden, the Parliament made the decision to include trans persons in hate crime and hate speech legislation. In Argentina, a historic sentence was delivered: the murder of human rights defenders Diana Sacayan has been considered as a hate crime based on the gender identity. In the Austria the Constitutional Court just officially recognized the non-binary alternative gender. In the Netherlands, a court – which referenced precedent in India and Nepal – suggested that the Dutch legislature should provide a way for citizens to legally identify as neither male nor female if they prefer.

We hope that governments continue to engage in constructive dialogue and share their best practices in this arena to ensure that the momentum surrounding sexual orientation, gender identity and expression and sex characteristics (SOGIESC) issues continues to grow.

I thank you, Mr. President.
